Skeleton reconstruction of a bear found in caves

The Finnish bear

The exhibition presents the relationship between men and bears since prehistoric times in the environment of the Berici hills.

The path winds through seven showcases, each of them describes a shelter or a cave that makes us understand the daily life of prehistoric man. Each showcase displays information on a specific cave and the artifacts found there.

In the Broion cave and in the Paina cave, for example, you can find bear bones and flint artefacts dating back to the Middle (Neanderthal) and Higher (Homo sapiens) Paleolithic. In the cave of San Bernardino, however, there are bone remains of two types of bear: the cave bear and the brown bear. There are also exhibited reproductions of hunting tools made through the technique known as experimental archeology: a javelin head made with the Levallois method and two different types of arrows.
